

The goal is to address the health and well-being of all people, regardless of their background, race, ethnicity, or social status. This is achieved through a combination of policies, programs, and interventions that aim to reduce health disparities and improve the overall health of the population.

What does "Health in All Policies" mean?

The concept of "Health in All Policies" (HiAP) is a strategy that recognizes the interconnected nature of health and other policy areas. It involves the integration of health considerations into all levels of government decision-making, from local to national. This approach is based on the understanding that health is not just a medical issue, but a result of various social, economic, and environmental factors.

The social determinants of health are the conditions in the environments where people are born, live, learn, work, play, and age that affect a person's health status.

The goal of HiAP is to create a more equitable and healthy society by addressing the social determinants of health. This is achieved through a combination of policies, programs, and interventions that aim to reduce health disparities and improve the overall health of the population.
